

Running a committee calmly.

Ten minutes, cover to cover. How to move your committee off the group chat — without a fight.

The group chat isn't the problem. It's just not a plan.

Chat is where the committee talks. That's fine — keep it. The problem is when chat is also where the decisions live: who's booking the venue, what was agreed about tickets, when the posters go up. Scroll far enough and it's all in there. Nobody scrolls far enough.

Signal Studio gives the committee one calm place for the plan itself. Four small products, one system: notes catches things the second they come up. tasks holds who's doing what, by when. timeline is the one plan everyone can see. signal shows you the one thing that needs you today.

Chat for talk. The plan for truth.

Five steps, one evening.

- 01 Make your workspace. Student Edition — €8.99 a year with a college email. Your committee's workspace is included.
 - 02 Put in the next event. The ball, the trip, the campaign — whatever's nearest. Use one of the four templates in the kit.
 - 03 One owner, one date, per task. "Someone should sort the DJ" is how things fall apart. A name and a date is how they don't.
 - 04 Share the timeline. Send the committee the one plan. That link replaces "wait, what's happening when?"
 - 05 Check the morning view. Open signal with your coffee. It shows the one thing due today. Do that, and you're ahead.
-

Don't ban the group chat.

You will lose that fight, and you don't need to win it. Three rules do the work instead:

-
- 01 Decisions leave the chat. The moment something is agreed, it goes in the plan with a name and a date. Ten seconds.
 - 02 Answer questions with the link. "When's the venue booked for?" — don't retype it. Send the timeline. People learn where truth lives.
 - 03 Run the meeting from the plan. Open the timeline at the start of every meeting. What's done gets marked done, what's stuck gets a new owner. Meetings get shorter.
-

Four templates, pre-built.

T·1 The Ball. Venue to afters, ten weeks out.

T·2 The Trip. Headcount, money, transport, the weekend itself.

T·3 The Campaign. A messy few weeks with a hard deadline.

T·4 The AGM Handover. So next year's committee doesn't start from zero.

Your ambassador runs one workshop each term on running a committee calmly — and has a direct line to the founder for anything the guide doesn't cover.

signal studio.

CALM COORDINATION